Yukon Gold

An English Style Pale Ale, golden in colour, light on the palate, slightly citrusy tang due to the use of wheat in the brewing.

Yukon Red

An Amber Ale, deep red in colour and full malt body, chocolate overtones with a snappy, bitter finish.

Bonanza Brown

This ale proves that dark beer does not need to be over the top with strong flavours. It is rich and malty, with hints of chocolate and a bit of nuttiness in the taste.

Ice Fog IPA

A true Indian Pale Ale, lots of hop, bitters, and flavorous but full malt body to balance them out.

Deadman Creek

An unfiltered wheat beer with the addition of natural cranberries for a tart finish, light and very refreshing.

Grizzly Wheat

A North American style unfiltered wheat beer. Grizzly is cloudy in appearance due to some yeast left in suspension, giving it a delicious tangy taste.

Whiskeys

The word "whiskey" is an Anglicisation of the Scottish Gaelic word meaning "water of life" and legend suggests it was distilled as early as 1494.

Scottish (Scotch)

Scottish whisky is most commonly referred to as "Scotch" Over the centuries, scotch has survived Prohibition, wars, revolutions, economic depressions and recessions
...enjoy!

Blends

Blends are typically made from a mixture of malt and grain whiskies - often along with neutral spirits, caramel and flavouring. Blends are usually from many distilleries so that the blender can produce a flavour consistent with the quality we've all come to expect from them.

Single Malt

A single malt is a special, golden liquid. It must be from a single distillery made from a mash that uses only one particular malted grain. In most cases, the name of a single malt will be that of the distillery. Scotland currently sustains approximately 90 such distilleries.

Canadian

According to the laws in Canada, a Canadian whiskey must be mashed, distilled and aged entirely in Canada. So, why do we call it Rye? At one time, rye was the standard ingredient in Canadian whiskey and the term stuck, so it's perfectly acceptable to order a rye or a whiskey.

Irish

Peat is rarely used in the malting process, so that Irish Whisky has a smoother finish as opposed to the smoky, earthy overtones common to some Scotches. Ireland has only four distilleries left, but each one produces a handful of different whiskeys.

Bourbon

There are a few rules in producing a whiskey that can be considered a "Bourbon". The main ones are that it must be distilled entirely in the US, it must contain 51% corn and be aged in new, charred oak barrels. The name of the spirit derives from its historical association with an area now known as Bourbon County in Kentucky.
